

Funding Opportunities for International Students

There are different options students can use to support their studies as an international student in the UK, and it is worth researching each one of them. Some of the main routes you may wish to explore are as follows:

International student loans

Individual countries and banks will have different schemes in place for this, so make sure to research loans for students from your own country.

Private companies

Private companies sometimes offer financial support for students, with the condition that they then work for the company after graduating. You may wish to investigate large companies who are keen to employ graduates of your subject.

Scholarships

Below, we've highlighted some country-specific scholarships which are particularly prolific or which Lucy Cavendish students have previously received. However, there are far too many scholarships to list in this document, so we encourage you to also use the following websites to search for scholarships:

Cambridge-specific scholarships

The financial support available for international undergraduates is limited but at Cambridge this includes Cambridge Commonwealth, European and International Trust awards; College awards; and country-specific scholarships. Few full undergraduate scholarships are available – most support is a partial contribution and is means-tested. Please pay particular attention to the application requirements and deadlines.
